

International relations at nyu

Education

I am interested in international relations. That is the of study I want to pursue at NYU. This is interesting to me because working in an international relations field can put me in a position to make the world a more equitable and peaceful place.

Attending NYU will help me because the college has a great reputation for academic rigor. I know that I will need to learn many things before I am able to achieve my dream of working in international relations. NYU also offers world-class connections to other academic institutions. I realize that I will need to reach beyond the NYU community in order to do the type of work I want to do.

In addition to my chosen course of study, I feel that I am a good fit for either NYU campus. I have had experiences that I feel will add to the community of scholars at NYU. Giving as well as receiving is an important value that I have. Both are important for establishing a community of interdependence, respect and reciprocity. These values have been instilled in me since I was young and I know that they will guide me in my studies and in my life work.

I look forward to becoming a part of the academic community at NYU.

International relations is such a broad field of study. I am excited about working with a cosmopolitan faculty and student body as I gain the knowledge I need to have so I can discover all of the possibilities international relations at NYU has to offer.
