After the death of Ranjit Singh, Punjab wasn't in a very good state. After the death of Ranjit Singh's successors, Duleep Singh, the youngest son of Ranjit Singh, was crowned the ruler of Punjab. 6 years later, in 1849, the British took over Punjab, and Duleep Singh was put into the care of John Login. His mother Jind Kaur, and Duleep Singh wouldn't meet for another 13 years. Duleep Singh was then Anglicized, in most aspects. He became a pawn of the British, in many ways. He left India for England, at 1854, and danced to the tunes of British, under the care of John Login.

He was a lavish spender, and drank a lot. Duleep Singh also married 2 women, and went against Queen Victoria for marrying Ada Wetherill, who was his mistress. Throughout his life, Duleep Singh was known as a betrayer to Indians, and a pawn to the British. When Duleep Singh was 10, Punjab was taken over by the British. Duleep Singh was taken by the British and put under the care of John Login. He was anglicized in the most aspects. In 1854, Duleep Singh was sent to England. When Duleep Singh arrived in England, Queen Victoria showed a lot of love towards Duleep Singh.

Duleep Singh also stayed with the royal family, but then took a tour of Europe with John Login. He also became a part of the Royal Photographic Society in 1855 until his death. Duleep Singh was such a pawn of the British that he let Queen Victoria be the godmother of Duleep's children. Duleep Singh had eight children in total. Queen Victoria did not like Duleep's second wife, as she really loved Bamba Muller, his first wife. He maybe was a pawn for the British because maybe he used the British to buy many things he wanted in life.

However, Duleep Singh was surrounded in debt even after his death, which was paid after selling his houses. Duleep Singh wasn't a very great person, which was shown from his lavish spending. Throughout Duleep's life in England, he was known for a lavish lifestyle. He was known for his lavish lifestyle in Auchlyne and Aberfeldy, and he would usually go to shooting parties. He was also named the "Black Prince of Perthshire". He would dress in a highland costume most of the time.

When Duleep Singh's mother arrived in England, he was given knowledge about his kingdom that was his, and his Sikh faith. Duleep Singh then bought a country estate at Elveden, and started to live the life of an English aristocrat. Every house Duleep Singh rented, was from the British, which is maybe why Duleep Singh was a pawn of the British. Even when he went to go meet his mother in India, his trip was funded by the British.

Duleep Singh's culture was also affected, as he married twice and may have cheated on his wife, which is a grave sin in India. On June 7, 1864, Duleep Singh married Bamba Muller, who was part Ethiopian and part German. Duleep Singh met Bamba Muller after scattering his mother's ashes, in Egypt. He married a woman he met right after his mother's death. In India, it is unusual to have a love marriage, so his culture was changed in the aspect of love and marriage.

Later in Duleep's life, he married Ada Douglas Wetherill, who was his mistress. Queen Victoria suspected that Duleep Singh had a relationship with Ada before Bamba even died. Ada had stayed with Duleep throughout the years, and may have gotten close with Duleep Singh during that time. Queen Victoria did not accept Ada as Duleep Singh's wife.

His culture changed drastically from what it would've been in India, as he married twice, and cheated on his wife. However, Duleep Singh later did reconvert into Sikhism. The state of Punjab after the death of Ranjit Singh wasn't very great. His successors were assassinated, until Duleep Singh came to rule Punjab. He wasn't assassinated, and his mother, Jind Kaur was Regent.

After the Anglo-Sikh Wars, the Sikhs had lost their kingdom, and the British took over. The ruler of Punjab, Duleep Singh, at the time was put under the care of John Logan. He was then Anglicized in most perspectives.

By doing the British made Duleep Singh a pawn of the British. He left India for England, and acted as a puppet of the British. He had a lavish lifestyle, and drank a lot, which wouldn't happen in India at the time.

He also married two women, and cheated on his first wife. Duleep Singh was known as a betrayer to Indians, and a pawn to the British." If you stand for nothing, you will fall for everything."-Malcolm X
