Purpose of life has been one of the most discussed topics in philosophy and history. The fact that we as human beings can think and free will we often question what are we living for. What is the purpose of our being? The discourse to find an answer of this question leads to many answers based on their core beliefs. For example, a religious person might think that their purpose of life is a higher calling, an instruction from God. While a spiritual person might think that their purpose is to attain something broader, something like inner peace. Some people define it beyond religion and spirituality having clearer set of goals such as a successful career in a certain field or be an entrepreneur. It doesn't matter how you define your purpose in life.

What, however is important that you should have one. This passage aims to explain why is it important to have a purpose. To begin with, having a purpose in life gives you clarity which allows you to filter unimportant and important goals and aims. This also allows us to carefully select our short-term goals and work towards our long-term ones. In this modern era, we are bombarded with information, this allows some of us to go astray from our goals as we are not able to differentiate the important and unimportant. Therefore, having a clear purpose would mean that we always keep striving to achieve our goals. Having a purpose in life gives your life a meaning.

This definition of life enhances your focus to constantly achieve your goals. For example, instead of wasting your time at a job you aren't passionate about, you start focusing on a career which is more suited to your purpose. You might even change your social circle and start spending time with new people, forming relationships which enhance your growth socially or aren't noxious. Therefore, defining life results in getting a right direction and start moving towards it.

A purpose in life gives you a sense of consciousness. You start living a conscious life. You start questioning your choices and carefully weigh in your dilemmas both in personal and professional lives. This however does not mean that suddenly every problem disappears. But you have a start towards living your best life and grow personally. You can be occupied with a lot of chores but without a conscious life, you may not have a purpose.

And without a purpose you set and pursue goals that aren't best suited to you, they are vague and random at best. You might achieve those random goals after a lifetime of hard work only to find out in the end that is not what you wanted. Having a purpose in life gives you positive vibes and fills you up with energy every day. Because when you are working towards your purpose you are excited to start your day. You know you will be doing a job which you love and the feeling of working for your ultimate goals give you inner satisfaction. Your weekends become uneasy as you want to do what you love.

On the contrary, when you don't have any purpose you just drag yourself through the day. You feel miserable and anxious all the time. Making through the week feels like a war. And then as weekends approach you look forward to them like a POW looking at freedom.

This however, does not mean you aren't good at your daily chores. While you may be perfect at your job, you might still lack that flare. And sooner or later, your job, career and whole life becomes a burden. Therefore, we should pursue something which has a sense of higher meaning to you and yourself only. Lastly, as a conclusive remark, a purpose allows you to define success on your own terms. The meaning of success varies from person to person. To some it might be a certain position while for others a stable family. It is something which is extremely subjective.

However, one must note that success is not an end, it is living your goals, doing what you love and gain satisfaction every day.
