Prostitution Every situation exposes itself at some point, regardless of how flawless the surface value may appear. There is no reason as to why somebody has to position themselves in a place where they feel restricted to utilize what is their own, including their own physical figure to their very potential. Prostitution is something that has provided individuals with something required to sustain one's own in today's society, and something that has become only more vital along with time; money and the liberty it includes. The containment of a legal prostitution element in society would result in a consideration for the sex workers own body and choices, a more logical reason to decrease the possibility of sexual assault, and cause a growth in benefits for governments who permit. All people have the liberty of mind when it comes to the consensual choices they want to make regarding their bodies, and banning prostitution is subliminally prohibiting that.

A body is a possession, of course tangible, yet people fail to realize the point of what a body means to one, especially those who do not perceive themselves on the outside the way sex workers do. There should be an ability to be allowed to do what one pleases with his/her body, as long as it is consensual in the long run. This element, for some reason is a non-factor when it comes to sex workers.

If one would like to choose to make profit off of their physical stature, then one should proceed. With these scenarios, it is hard to gain a clear view, unless the one within the situation is the most vocal, and that results in an issue for all involved, such as Bedford v. Canada. The situation was three sexworkers by the names of Valerie Scott, Amy Lebovitch, and TerriJean Bedford went to court to change the sex worker laws in Canada, as they viewed them as unconstitutional, and even after the case there were a ton of disagreements and disgust in the final result for the people who have not had to see the situations from both sides of the floor.

. The laws that changed were on December 20th, 2013 and it was taking out the prohibition of brothels, street soliciting, and avail. According to the Canadian Charter of Rights, under Mobility Rights, all people have the right to seek work, and even more areas within the country that have employment under the national benchmark, will be prioritized with every possible extra occupation given. This does not mean that all people have to resort to this, as with the freedom of having the ability to resort to any employment that is not prohibited, it is allowed.

The current status legally for Prostitution in Canada makes it illegal to buy services sexually. In June of 2014, bill C-36 was created, focusing on exploited people in the communities, and was passed in November 2014. The bill also makes it illegal to get a profit from recruiting people into prostitution.

This puts one section of why prostitution should be legalized into perspective, because of the fact that it is not fair to place a dilemma for sexworkers like this. The safety is a priority for all people in every nation. It is, for some reason, an unspoken priority and humane deal which always seems to be conveniently removed when aspired. With prostitution being a source of main income for many people out in the world, the lack of safety is the main reason as to why sex workers lack the job safety that is taken as a parody in many other fields of intrigue. To begin, legalization of purchasing prostitution will result in less sexual incidents targeted toward sex workers on a daily magnitude. To put in perspective, in New York, Rhode Island, a section in the law that implicated being a prostitute as a crime was eliminated, and that resulted in the solid decrease of sexual crimes by 31%.

The experiment spanned around 29 years from 1980-2009, which means that the percentage in decrease was on average a percent decrease every year. When there is a decrease of that significance, with the law put back in place, it is inevitable that the percentage will remain around that caliber for the foreseeable future. It is a perfect mix of quantity and quality. On top of that there will be a lack of "pimps," people who recruit prostitutes, who resort to common abuse on every level to achieve their money, and with the legalization of sex work, that will result in a decrease of people who resort to violent and unprofessional antics to bring people in a already taboo career.

There will also be a bigger deal that people aspiring to engage in intimate sex with someone will have the ability to choose their preferred women, as opposed to going in a hard pattern of looking at any prostitute in the street and taking advantage. These mutual situations result in the security of all sex workers along with the ability to make a legal living off of it, along with the lack of dangerous repercussions that comes with being an illegal prostitute, which is usually caused by people looking for sex and their "pimps." There is no reason to not put safety and satisfaction together.

The main factor that does not relate to the satisfaction of the government, which is perceived as a one street powerhouse to all, is all about the money factor with the legalization of sex work. In reference, Nevada, a place which legalizes sex work, some workers earn up to about $3000 a week, and some earning more as well. Potentially, the legalization of prostitution occurring will end up being a lot of tax revenue for the government looking at the money, some sex workers can earn. Governments all over can charge a yearly fee to the license provided for sex workers, shop owners, and clients as well to bring in more money for the personal benefit.

The biggest part for all this is that there is a huge possibility for foreign revenue coming in for the countries or states who legalize this field of work. Everybody would have the comfort level to proceed with sex service on the receiving part, and a lot of tourists will take advantage of that as well, especially if there is a specific event in that town or state, even more than usual, when it is proceeded with illegally regardless. There is a clear benefit, also with the fact that there is no difference in the inevitable bad problems, it is no reason why this is hard to regulate. With the benefits of the government outweighing all the negative sections in play as well, it is tough to see why intimacy cannot be legal while bringing in revenue as well.

The containment of a legal prostitution element in society would result in a consideration for the sex workers own body and choices, a more logical reason to decrease the possibility of sexual assault, and cause a growth in benefits for governments who permit. These evidently beneficial outlines that outweigh all the negative occurrences related to prostitution that will occur regardless, all speak to the fact that prostitution is something that would be best if it were legalized. There is a reason as to why people resort to the world of sex for profit, and legalizing something rational and normal is only going to do nothing but good for everybody involved, as something is never shown completely at all.
