

My opinion on current studying

Although I understand that this is by the end of the day for the student benefit so the professor may give off more assistance, it much rather left a bad taste in my mouth. The start of this class however gave me some way to ease into it, as the professor himself admitted students for the most part do not enjoy the course, but rather go through with it simply because it is required.

The overall interview of each student and note taking of said information helped me understand much more all around than what a diagnostic may be able to give. When learning about Me You in the class he brought up the different Chinese languages such as Mandarin which led to me think more so that there is so much more to learn about topics such as culture and there is more to get into. The idea of there being different languages for a country was more than that as it showed to me more so that there is a lot more that one may be able to learn in their quest for knowledge rather than learning just what is needed in the moment.

In order to learn more about this I had seen that not only are there many different official languages, but there is a number of indigenous languages and even some minority languages such as Khaki. Even more interesting was when the professor brought up that Me You simply said Chinese at first to explain what languages he could speak despite the number of languages there really are. As pointed out by Mr.

Straus, if Me was in a room full of Chinese students most likely he would have been much more specific. This brings out to me a larger societal impact that a majority can have on a minority and shows that as students we must strive for rather to get a truer understanding of the world around us. With that we as a society may be able to break barriers on a multitude of levels including socially and be able to interact with others on a better level.

As an English student it is important that I too must not limit my own work because of the audience as it is sometimes that extra information that may give more intrigue to the reader. There was a large flow of information that was brought up with less time than required to take notes on every word stated. So with that I learned had to really adapt with the course and figure out new ways to take notes. In an attempt to gain as much information as possible I wrote down key terms and important information on each person with the first SST of course being the name.

This was not truly enough to get everything and I understand I definitely need to improve in the way I take notes. As it is I've limited myself for not including enough information on each person and in the case of taking notes for English Composition it can mean the difference between a passing grade and a failing one. Overall this interesting way to start off the class helped me to further realize, through a deeper level of looking at it, that I must read in between the lines.

There is so much more meaning that can be found in what may even be the most broad of statements. I must find a better Rodriguez way of taking notes or else the entire essay may suffer. Yet the way that this first day of class has gone I feel less pushed into the subject, but rather eased into the idea. Through this essay can see some of the issues in my own writing and I understand that I have fellow students who may communicate with to better myself.
