

Academic interests and professional goals in business

Business

In my initial research, I had managed to discover the significance of aligning one's goals with the global perspectives in order to gain flexibility which adds to knowledge and extends usefulness to both communication and leadership attributes necessary for any business endeavour. With this end in mind, I believe that the College of Business in Illinois would be highly capable of broadening my knowledge on global perspectives given the opportunity of travelling abroad. Being in America generally yields for a learner an exposure to diverse cultures, intellectual atmosphere, and various forms of academic practise which I'm fully aware would lead me to develop more optimism and a great level of interdependence besides acquiring pertinent knowledge and skills in the field of business.

Knowing how competent the standards are of its curriculum, I am confident that by taking up units in related courses such as marketing, accounting, finance, economics, and entrepreneurship through the College of Business at Illinois, I would be able to make an educated decision about which among these areas best suits my set of strengths. Additionally, since the school is overall rich with versatile faculty and facilities that provide the right academic resources, I feel assured at obtaining the best business program designed not only for the individual but excellence and values through teamwork as well.