Essay Outline

Argument: I would support a plan to build a restaurant in my neighborhood.

Support 1: A restaurant would be very helpful catering for the needs of those who have long working hours and those who don't work anywhere close to their houses.

Support 2: Having a restaurant would provide a ready market for the farm produce.

Support 3: A restaurant would definitely need workers like cleaners, waiters, and other employees.

Thesis: A restaurant can greatly fuel the growth of my neighborhood and open it up to more investors who would aim to tap the growing number of people.

Model Essay

Eating out is a culture that dates back several hundred years. The habit increases with urbanization. People in towns and cities like restaurants because apart from providing an opportunity for a change in the way one dines, restaurants provide the convenience that they need. As such, I would support a plan to build a restaurant in my neighborhood.

For starters, a restaurant would be very helpful in catering for the needs of those who have long working hours and those who don't work anywhere close to their houses. These people need to eat at different times and since they do not have to eat food prepared at home (at least for some meals), it would make sense that they eat out.

This will ultimately make working in the area more attractive for people who have come there just for work.

Since my neighborhood has many farmers, having a restaurant would provide a ready market for the farm produce. And as more people continue eating out, the market for farm produce would also increase, which means more sales for the farmers. This would mean that farmers would not have to worry about their fresh farm produce going bad or being forced to transport the produce to far distances to find customers.

A restaurant would definitely need workers like cleaners, waiters, and other employees. Some of these are very likely to come from my neighborhood. This would mean that employment rates in the area would increase.

Ultimately, these people will have greater spending power and the ripple effect pertaining to growth would definitely be felt.

The growth of any neighborhood is highly dependent on the facilities that are available in that area. For instance, a restaurant can greatly fuel the growth of my neighborhood and open it up to more Investors who would be aiming to tap the growing number of people. All this would definitely result to faster growth and better standards of living for the residents.
