Currently, I am the president of the American Youths for Change whereby I have enabled many young people to abandon drug abuse. As a leader, I have motivated thousands of youths to pressurize their political leaders to become responsible. I have also staged numerous leadership seminars both locally and internationally. In these seminars, I have been able to preach the importance of accountability to young leaders. This is due to economic stagnation which has affected many countries. Ideally, my dream is to see a corruption-free world where leaders uphold the responsibility bestowed to them by their people. As a leader, I also dream to see a world where the rule of law is respected and a society where the opinion of every citizen counts. I also want to see a society where leaders have moral values and integrity. This will allow the citizen to have trust and hope in our government. As a leader, I want to leave a good legacy as someone who changed society in a positive manner.

I want to create a change in society for the growth of my people. This is because I strongly believe that any standing society today has a possibility of dying. I want death to be alien to my society. My efforts to inspire society have been rewarded. For instance, I was awarded in 2012 for being the best emerging initiative leader in the world. My reward came as a result of the role I played in educating the American youths on ways of avoiding drug abuse. Instead, I challenged the youths to focus their energy on changing their society. My role as a youth educator changed more than 10, 000 drug addicts. In addition, I have fought for the rights of the poor in society. My role as a civil rights activist has seen the American government implement essential laws for the common benefits of Americans. Notable among these laws is the anti-lynching law revised in 2010, and racist state laws which <https://assignbuster.com/the-american-youths-for-change/> were also revised in 2010. These laws have resulted in the reduction of racial discrimination between blacks and whites. The two races now coexist peacefully. As a leader, it is my vision, goal, and mission to inspire society in a positive manner.
