

Social we need to fulfill the doubts

Social AcceptanceA child goes to school, the teacher asks, “ Have your mom come in for a ‘ teachermother conference’.” Suddenly, the child is confused. For the first time he thinks about his home setting and wonders, “ Which mom is supposed to come in? I have two moms.” The example given is not an unusual one. It is something that happens all the time in today’s society in which homosexual couples live with and rear children together. Where most children have a mother and a father, children of gay or lesbian parents have either two moms or two dads. While some may look at this as a “ taboo” or , being in the Baptist belt, “ a sin”, in today’s society more than 15% of families are with same sex parents who are raising one or more children.

Legally, homosexual marriages are not binding, thus causing difficulty in adopting or fostering children. Due to society it is often difficult to birth a child, as well, without a “ husband” or a “ father” in a mother’s life. Therefore, those who have children, via pregnancy, foster, or adoption have conquered every difficult task. So, is this family an abnormal family because there are no opposite sex parents.

Or is it a normal family because of the love its’ members share? Can we say what it is that makes a family. Perhaps, if we can answer these questions, we will find the solutions we need to fulfill the doubts in our minds. Should we ever condemn someone for loving? When we judge, is this what morality is?? I think not! If we would teach our children to accept “ love” as that which it is, a mutual feeling of love and respect, perhaps the prejudice and conclusions that society sees will change. We must teach that “ gay” is not a “ bad” word, it is merely the same love as others feel, but done in a special way. Because we are different, does this make u
