Description of the personality theory

This questionnaire is based on the personality theory of Carl Jung. Carl Jung has classified personality into eight types. These personalities are based on attitudes like introversion and extroversion and four other functions. Carl Jung was a person influenced by Sigmund Freud's theories on psychology and he met him to discuss the same. The first of Jung's psychologist types were general attitude types. According to him, there are two attitudes, which are of opposing nature. The introversion and extraversion, which is like yin and yang Chinese symbology. There are opposing but complementary forces of individuality. The introvert is restricted to their inner world while the extrovert explores the outside world. The people who are introverts communicate less, have fewer friends and are reserved in nature. While extroverts like to have a large circle of friends and communicate well with people and enjoy socializing with people and indulging in pleasure activities. The other four functions of personality that when combined with one of the attitudes form his eight different personalities. The functions are feelings, thinking, sensation and intuition. From this basis, the eight personality types are extroverted thinking, introverted thinking, extroverted feeling, introverted feeling, extroverted sensing, introverted sensing, extroverted intuitive, and introverted intuitive. So all these questions in this questionnaire are focusing on the extroverted and introverted of people. The questions regarding their communication and socialization and reveal what type of personalities they are. Also people who believe in fate, destiny and human beings are more less people with introverted intuition. The people who not change decisions are introverts in nature as being reserved they have rigid character. We can see that such people do not have many friends and socialize less. They also do not get excited opposed to introverts. The introverts plan ahead but extroverts are likely to encounter problems and are spontaneous in decision-making. SO questions oriented on friends, communication, intuition, decision-making can give clue to their personality and thinking level. We can see that introverts are more punctual because extroverts has an open minded attitude to life they do not have rules much in life. So questions on punctuality and following rules are part of the questionnaire.
