Water Color Painting Lesson Summary This lesson is about teaching sixth grade how to observe, paint, read and express water paintings. They will be given various pieces of neon color spreading and water color illusions and they will need to study and reflect what they see in them. They will be taught to hone their psychophysical observations on the art pieces. Teaching them the two-dot limiting case on how to get into the art projections will be the essence of this class. Façade neural model will be explained to them in lecture mode. The basics of print like, symmetry, the abstractness of asymmetry, lower contrast edges, higher contrast edges and finally the perceptual boundaries of vision and reality of water color prints are the fundamentals of this class.

Procedures

The procedures for this class are;

Step 1: Children will sit down on the floor (white coloring sheets on the floor) instead of having a canvas in front of them. (Children will not get tired holding their hands in the air).

Step 2: Asked to brush colors on canvas without any restrictions

Step 3: teacher will go up to each student and tell them specific points about their painting so they could make it better.

Step 4: Let them be. Let them use their imaginations and create whatever pleases them.

Step 5: they will be briefed about specifics of painting later so they would take short notes.

Step 6: They are supposed to write about their own piece.

Step 7: Next day, they are supposed to repeat the process in the hopes of improvement.
