

Generation limbo

Business

Generation Limbo In light of the current job market trends, the “ Generation Limbo” factor is critical to address. Personally, my plans for the future encompass the development of a competitive career that is founded on college education. My interest is to practice my knowledge and skills fully, within a career path that capitalizes on my personal, academic, and professional strengths.

#2

The idea of limited job opportunities is evident in today’s job markets. More and more graduates are leaving colleges, while the generation of job opportunities remains relatively low. In this respect, my intention is to explore ways of becoming an employer myself. I intend to explore investment avenues for small and/or medium enterprises, thereby creating jobs and employment opportunities to other people. In case this plan fails, I will consider alternative jobs that directly or indirectly utilize my knowledge and skills within or without my area of specialty.

#3

At a personal level, business future is undoubtedly worrying. The number of graduates is consistently outmatching job creation efforts. At the same time, the disparity between the rich and the poor is growing at an alarming rate, thereby making it harder for fresh graduates to realize their personal and career goals.

#4

In light of the “ Generation Limbo” issues, college is a helpful institution. College exposes me to diverse personal, academic, and professional experiences. In so doing, college life prepares me for more than just job search and employment. It equips me with the knowledge and skills to pursue survival opportunities, over and above career growth and development.

<https://assignbuster.com/generation-limbo/>