Islam has been in the African continent for many years since the formation of the Arabian Peninsula. Although Sunni makes up the largest number of African Muslims, the complexity of African Islam is revealed in many schools of thought. Islam is not stagnant; it is constantly undergoing changes forced by economic, social and political conditions surrounding it. African Islam is commonly adapted to beliefs and cultural context of the local's orthodoxies. Additions, both global and local; dimensions, are posed by Islam.

The African Muslims mainly belong to the Sunni denomination. Despite this domination, a significant number of both the Shias and Ahmadiyya are also present. Many Sufis are known to be syncretic, and they practice Sufism with traditional folklore beliefs. Salafism is new, and it has started spreading in Africa due to many organizations and funding.
