So how does the religion of the Faith of the Seven from Game of Thrones relate to Catholicism? Well, the Faith of the Seven is actually fundamentally the same as its non-fictional analogue. In an interview, George R. R.

Martin states, “ Instead of the Trinity of the Catholic Church, you have The Seven, where there is one God with seven aspects. In Catholicism, you have three aspects- the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost...” As you can see, both Catholicism and the Faith of the Seven believe in only one deity along with different aspects that represents a different virtue. Additionally, both have hierarchy in the religion. Catholicism conveys with it a power structure that is hierarchal, with the most elevated positioning clergy, the Pope, who lives in the Apostolic Palace of the Vatican, and a council of Cardinals. The Faith of the Seven, correspondingly, has the High Septon as the most elevated positioning clergy, who lives in the Sept of Baelor, who manages The Seven together with a council of the most astounding positioning septons.

Furthermore, both religions have a holy text; Catholicism has the “ Bible” and the Faith of the Seven has “ The Seven-Pointed Star”. When it comes to morality, both look down upon gambling, prostitution, homosexuality, and incest. And finally, linking the Sparrows to that of the Protestant Reformation, which I will go in more detail in the following paragraph.
