

Traditional family

Sociology

ASSIGN BUSTER

Life has become so expensive and it is not possible for the man's income to be enough to bring the food on the table. In this case, both parents are forced to work in order to provide for their children.

The wife was left alone to do all the house chaos in a traditional family setting which is different today since one can employ a house girl or boy to do the house jobs while the wife goes for a white-collar job. On the other hand, a man was treated like a king and the wife as a servant in the traditional family but today the wife has a bit of freedom since she can choose what she wants with her life.

House chaos in a traditional family setting was divided into gender. For example, the woman takes care of the children inside the home and the man works outside the home. Each person knew what he or she was supposed to do for example the boys were supposed to help their father while the girls were supposed to help their mothers with cooking and washing dishes.

The traditional family has some values which are usually social standards brought about by natural forces of nature. These values have been tested customs which normally provide emotional and physical support for rearing offspring. The religious value and traditions reinforce these social values.

The traditions reflect a natural order responsible for providing and protecting children as they grow and learn. The traditional family was seen as an institution responsible for bringing up physically and emotionally healthy children. Naturally, a family institution is suited for supporting each other through unconditional love; growing children and providing for them both physically and emotionally.

There has been too much divorce and cohabitating in society today such that the traditional family is on the decline. There is more than fifty percent divorce in our society today. In the United States, people spend less time in marriage than they used to do as they see no use of marriage and family as well as bearing children. Due to the fact that traditional constituted, the people now see that marriage and family are not satisfying the social and intimacy need of many people.

<https://assignbuster.com/traditional-family/>

Traditionally, the main aim of marriage was to produce a male heir who was supposed to carry on the family line and not to provide mutual companionship and support for husband and wife. Today, this is very different as people are comfortable with either they get a male or female child. Recent studies have shown that a female child looks after their old parent more than their male counterparts against the traditional belief that the male child was better at looking after their aging parent.

Many people today value their nuclear family other than the extended family due to drastic economic changes that have affected our economy. In this case, one has to have a smaller family in order to provide basic food to them all with difficulty. On the other hand, it is not also possible for one to build big quarters for our extended family hence we are forced to live with our nuclear family.