The Most Important Principle of Government ere most important principle of government in a democracy is popular sovereignty. This is because it acts as the government's feedback, keeps the government limited, and lets the people express their feelings. First, popular sovereignty is important because it acts as the government's feedback. If a government is doing very well and keeping the people happy, then they receive positive popular sovereignty, such as thank you letters to congressman, in return.

If the government is acting too much like a dictatorship, then they will receive negative popular sovereignty, such as protests, in return. So why is "feedback" important? Think of the world as a school, and America's government as a student in that school. In a school your grades are the most important aspect. They are the measurement of how well you are doing. In other words, they are your feedback. Therefore, since grades are important, and grades are nothing but feedback, feedback must be important as well.

Furthermore, since feedback is important and popular sovereignty is a form of feedback, popular sovereignty must also be important. Second, popular sovereignty is important, because it keeps the government limited. If a democracy is slowly turning into a dictatorship, the people will be sure to let the government know through popular sovereignty. If the government doesn't respond to the people's protest, the people will turn to more severe forms of popular sovereignty such as civil war and treason. At that point the government will be powerless.

What is a ruler with no one to rule? Therefore, a government is limited by popular sovereignty, because if the government tries to exceed those limits, popular sovereignty will deny it the power to do so. It is important to have a limited government, because if not, it will turn into dictatorship, an unfavorable form of government. Third, popular sovereignty is important, because it lets people express their feelings. Popular sovereignty is voting, protests, debate, wars, and basically any other way a person can express their feelings.

If a democracy doesn't let their people express their feelings, it will quickly turn into a dictatorship, as said in Harry S. Truman's quote on August 8, 1950: "Once a government is committed to the principle of silencing the voice of opposition, it has only one way to go, and that is down the path of increasingly repressive measures, until it becomes a source of terror to all its citizens and creates a country where everyone lives in fear." Therefore, a government must accept and include popular sovereignty in order to continue as a democracy, or become one.

In conclusion, popular sovereignty is the most important principle in a democracy, because it has a way of encompassing many other principles that are of somewhat significance to a democracy. For example, if popular sovereignty keeps a government limited, then it is practicing the principle limited government. If popular sovereignty lets the people express their feelings, then it is practicing the principle individual rights (freedom of speech). It is qualities like these of popular sovereignty make it very important in a democracy.
