

My career path with input from true colors survey

My Career path with input from True colors survey JAMES ISAACS AMU

HRMT100 Professor Mueller January 15, 2012 My Career path, with inputs from True color survey, shows my primary color is Orange. Here I sat as an older retiree and this is how I decided to enhance my career path. My essay is about my personality traits and learning abilities. With the Carolyn's Kalil's survey, this survey portrayed how my work ethic and abilities will affect any management practice I will use (Carolyn's Kalil's 1).

As for my learning abilities, well let us say I am definitely a hands' on person. The survey states that I am courageous. Well without breaking my arm, I think I am. The survey also states that I act on a moment's notice; well this is defiantly true, especially with my experience in the military. We never have a chance to think about anything during the moment, we just acted on it (Carolyn's Kalil's 1). The reasoning for my degree intent is; I still want to serve my community by creating programs to help with natural disasters.

One example I would create such a program that I would put into place, it would be a quick response team to help flood ravage areas. When I came into the military, I worked as an Aircraft Mechanic, and after seventeen years, an old injury took its toll on me, so I had to change my career path. This how I came into my current field; in this field, there are many actions that I deal with; which they include natural disasters, Soldier movements and launching fighter intercept missions.

So now, you can see how for me this can be a very exciting career. I also learned that the civilian equivalent, would most likely only deal with Natural Disaster and Homeland defense Missions. After extensive research, I have found that the Emergency Management and Disaster degree program was the way for me. After taking this survey, I have learned that my best learning ability as stated earlier was hands on. The Carolyn's Kalil's survey pointed out to me, which was, I am a people oriented achiever.

I do in fact process the ability to stimulate and provide the excitement that people enjoy. The survey also states that I am a natural leader, troubleshooter, and performer. There is still lot more this is just a brief paper. The assessments of traits of this survey are as accurate if I would have written them myself. I have never taken this survey before, and this was defiantly a revelation as I see the results that actually are my traits. I truly did answer the survey truthfully, and this way I would get an honest output.

The Carolyn's Kalil's survey produced a result on exactly the type of person that I am, people always first (Carolyn's Kalil 3). If you take care of your people, any task you ask them to do, most of the time they will complete them without much direction. Since my career path will defiantly working with people, and most likely be a hands on career field. After completing the Carolyn's Kalil's survey, I know, that I am making the right career path; and my reasons are to work for the community and most likely be dealing with Natural disasters.

So how could this not be the right decision for me? Therefore, now that old retired person has figured out his career path, he will defiantly continue his degree and with the survey, it was the right choice. There is no doubt I am moving in the right direction, and there is no turning back, but to finish what I have started to the best of my learning abilities. References Carolyn Kalil

Follow Your True Colors survey <http://www.truecolorscareer.com/index.htm>

Human Relations 4th Edition Strategies for Success