What a time to be an economist, as even the occurrences on the other side of the world have such influence on every individual's day-to-day lives due to the globalised economy being interlocked. This is where my interest in Economics has surfaced from as it is evident that economic factors control and have changed many of the happenings and improvements in our world. It is a subject eternally significant to everyone's life. I am motivated by the thought of studying economics as from a young age, the purpose of economic systems has always fascinated me and the impact upon us. Studying about the complexities of economic issues such as decision-making and its impact on business is an area that I look forward to learning more about.

Thus, continuing to further education can help me gain the utmost from my chosen course whilst allowing me to engage myself in every part of university life. Currently studying English Literature, Psychology, and Religious Studies, I thoroughly relish the research, analysis, and writing that go on in my chosen subjects. I value studying English Literature as I feel that the power of language is important when used effectively because it enhances your ability to express your views and opinions more intelligently, and widens your vocabulary. The study of Psychology has given me the opportunity to understand the mind and the complex clockwork that is involved, therefore learning this subject has definitely made me more intent and observant as a person. Religious Studies allows me to think independently about the intricate detail, whilst a philosophical pursuit into the world of religion has helped me enhance my critical thinking skills, which I now use in all aspects of my studies. Beyond my studies, I thoroughly enjoy partaking in sports from badminton to athletics; representing my school at the Lloyds Games for 5 years as their 100m sprinter. I was elected Form Rep throughout high school and took pride in representing my fellow peers.

Such accomplishments and roles developed my confidence to engage in group discussions as well as enhancing my organisational skills, and this is the sort of attitude I will definitely employ when studying at university. During summer, I had a work experience placement at my dad's lettings agency, Sterling De Vere, taking on the role of a sales negotiator. I was also involved in the marketing and evaluation of properties, and handling customer relations.

Working with such a firm has equipped me with many of the skills that I have today – such as working under pressure independently and has given me a strong understanding on how economics is functional in the real world. I currently hold a part-time job as a sales consultant at Kurt Geiger, which is an upmarket retailer. This has been highly beneficial to my interpersonal, communication, and time management skills.

I believe that my studies will gain from my organised character and disciplined approach to work. I like to keep well-informed with current economic affairs by habitually reading The Economist and The Economic Review. I also watch the news daily and follow stories in the media, for a wider breadth of knowledge concerning economics today.

Giving a lot of time and attention to this subject has made me appreciate the approaches that go on; I am committed to exploring more. I am an optimistic, highly motivated and hardworking individual, who is passionate and eager to thrive. I am devoted to working to the best of my ability and look forward to overcoming any challenges I am faced with. I acclimatise quickly to any surroundings, whether it be working independently, or as part of a team.

I hope to gain a deeper understanding of the way native economies cooperate and how these local decisions can provide towards a more global economic advance. I believe I have built up all the relevant skills that will aid me in this aspiring role to be a successful undergraduate; ultimately leading to a profession in the financial sector.
