The system of education in Pakistan is normally divided into five levels:

1. Pre-primary
2. Primary Secondary
3. Intermediate
4. Higher Secondary
5. University

Only 80% of Pakistani students complete their primary school education. The standard national education system is mainly started by the system. This standard national education system starts from Primary education after pre-primary education, students go through junior school . Then to the middle school for the basic education. The eight common examined disciplines are: Urdu, english, mathematics, arts, science, social studies, Islamiyat and sometimes computer studies such as Punjabi, Sindhi, Pashto and others may be taught in their respective provinces.

In Pakistan Secondary education consisting of board examination that is consisting of 2 year's education and have Science and General Group in it. In Pakistan the Intermediate education is also consisting of 2 year's education. it has science arts and general group in it. It is passed by board of intermediate and secondary education. After completing the Intermediate education, the students can go for the higher education to universities, there they complete their bachelors in their relevant field , as less people get chance to avail this opportunity to go for higher studies in Pakistan because of the higher education fee.

These are the basic education system which is working from the last several years in Pakistan. In order for Pakistan to survive in the coming years it should be highly projected that education needs to come on the top agenda of Pakistani government and its people. It is time, where there needs to be mental reconcile amongst the masses and the government that they need to focus on the education sector. It should be considered the pivotal point of balance for things to turn favorable.

Development and progression would come to a halt if there were no education. High literacy rate is another common factor in all developed countries. Education is a primary source of evolution. Developments in science and technology can be accelerated through a widespread of education. It is also understood that through education more skilled people will be produced who can make the country developed. In Pakistan, lack of education is a root of many social evils.

Child labour is a big problem, which is due to a lack of education in Pakistan. It should be mandatory that all children receive education till secondary level. Education equips people with the tools that will help them survive in the society. They can find a job and stand on their feet. This old saying of 'invest in rubies so that you earn profit in diamonds' might be one very correct formula for our Pakistani government to think about investing in education so that we see a substantial future.
