

Why is the field of child development considered interdisciplinary?

Psychology, Child Development

The field of child development is part of a larger, interdisciplinary field known as developmental science. Question 2 out of 2 points The common goal of investigators who study child development is to describe and identify those factors that influence young people during the first two decades of life. Question 3 2 out of 2 points Why is the field of child development considered interdisciplinary? Why is the field of child development considered interdisciplinary?

Contributions from researchers and professionals in different fields help solve everyday problems concerning children. Question 4 The field of child development is often divided into what three broad domains? Physical development, cognitive development, and emotional and social development Question 5 What period of human development brings the most rapid time of change? Answer the prenatal period 2 out of 2 points The field of child development is often divided into what three broad domains? Everyday problems concerning children. Question 4