of a report: Article XVI: General Provisions contains provisions on twelve subjects. The design of the Philippine flag, its color and symbols, as consecrated and honored by the people and recognized by law. It set forth in the first section followed by a section on any change, by law, for the adoption of new Philippine name, anthem and seal. Section 3 hereof provides State's immunity from suit. The composition of the Armed Forces of the Philippines as appointment and retirement of soldiers and officers are likewise found in this article. This article further provides for the establishment of a national civilian police commission, local executive over the people. It also stipulates general provisions on the benefits, pensions, assistance and care to war veterans and their dependents as to the retirees of the government and the private sectors. It is also mandated that the State shall protect the consumer against trade malpractices and substandard products, respect the freedom of speech and the press and regulate the ownership and management of mass media and advertising industry. Lastly, creation of consultative body to advise president on policies affecting indigenous cultural communities with members from such communities.

This constitution was passed by the First Session or the Third Board of Directors of China Literature and Art Foundation on the 26th day of December, 2007. This Constitution comes into effect on the day when the registration authority approves it. Conclusion: 1. To obtain a good development and a peaceful society each one of us should choose the right person who will help the society improved. 2. Some government officials don't apply the general provisions that was needed by the society. 3. Choosing the right person that will do his obligation for what he pledged to everyone. 4. The State must protect the consumer from trade malpractices and substandard products. 5. Establishment of the national and civilian commission. Recommendations: 1. The General Provisions of the Philippines must be given attention that would help improving our country. 2. There should be more assistance to veterans and their dependents as to the retirees of the government and the public sectors. 3. Having respect for the freedom of speech of the mass media. 4. The government must provide for the implementation. 5. The Constitution itself needs to be affected from time to time. Bibliography: 1.
