Islam and Akhter 2015, in their article " Child abuse in Bangladesh" mainly concentrated on the current child abuse condition in Bangladesh.

For the sake of describing the current oppression situation, the study tries to find out some causes of child oppression in Bangladesh. This study also tries to describe the factors that affect the child oppression. The study finds out some major causes of child oppression including physical torture, homicide, rape and sometimes heinous attacks with acid etc. The authors also discussed several forms of child oppression.

The four main forms of child oppression are physical abuse, psychological abuse, sexual abuse and neglect. Physical oppression is considered as intentional physical injury to children as a result of shaking, punching, biting, kicking, burning, beating, or otherwise physically harming. This type of oppression to young children may affect important regions of the brain to fail to form or grow properly resulting in inappropriate development. These types of alterations in brain maturation have long-term effects on language, academic & cognitive abilities of children. Generally, it includes frequent verbal oppression to children in the form of shouting, confinement, threats and humiliating criticism or degrading. Early marriage is one type of extreme physical and mental abuse against children. Child neglect includes failure to provide basic physical, emotional, medical and educational needs of a child.

Child sexual oppression is described by the authors as sexual gratification by adults through kissing, talking about sexually implicit matters to a child, fondling the sex organ of a child, forcing or alluring children in sexual acts of any kind. In Bangladesh society, there is little reliable quantitative data as this issue considered taboo. Children of all ages are at risk of sexual abuse or harassment in their own homes, from relatives and family friend. The shame and culture of silence associated with abuse make the gaining qualitative data challenging. This study provides some environmental factors that create situation favorable for child oppression. The child labor, domestic violence, violence on the street create favorable environment for child oppression.

This study also focuses on the consequences of child oppression. The previous experience of child oppression can negatively change the child's behavior including insomnia, discipline problems, anxiety, nightmares, depression etc. This abuse also affects the mental development of a child which interrupt his rational thinking, feelings, sympathy, empathy, benevolence and reasoning. Children who have been neglected or abused are more likely to be arrested as juvenile offenders & are more likely to be a sadist and involve in criminal activities as an adult
