

Looking living in that fantasy. in this

Entertainment, Movie

Looking at this artifact anyone could say that world has ended in a miserable way possible. This artifact shows me the true meaning of loneliness. In the artifact, there are so many emotions. But I want to talk about how lonely this picture looks to me. True there are robots but we can say they are nothing but an iron box which was supposed to when asked by a men/women.

They were just the time saver machines with a simple mistake by man, has turned them into the lethal machine. The reason for me to say that it was a 'mistake' because by far my knowledge no one want's to destroy the whole world or kill every single being living on this planet unless if that person is Dr Doom, but I can assure you that we are not living in that fantasy. In this artifact, we can say that the machines have destroyed everything and we can say that the earth was doomed, we can easily say this just by looking at the color of the picture, a black background has always been an ambassador for tragedy.

We can say that there are no survivors or they are completely at hiding like this picture shows. Looking at the destruction we can say there were many casualties and looking at the cars and the blood on them can explain another thing, when people tried to leave this place, they have been met with this robots. A whole street with just no one it This is where I can find the lonely part: A dark ally with no one to talk to or no one to ask for help except for the huge machines.

Everyone is afraid of coming out after thinking what can those machines can do them. We have always been warned about them since the beginning of time. When the movies like the terminator, I robot or many other movies or many bestselling novels etc. But at that time it was just entertainment, question is were they trying to tell us something?. Sure the man has made something that is absolutely incredible but they are the ones that became the man' salvation.

There is this line we can say about this article: " While the man has become the machine's creator, the machines have become man's destruction". This artefact makes me feel lonely like I said before and also sadness. Why sadness you might ask me, the world used to be a green place, where the kids used to play or the birds used to sing but it all has disappeared in the picture leaving it a dark and lonely place. This was once a place where all the living things used to breathe but now it is nothing but an unused computer where only the mechanical parts work. The artifact also makes me feel scared. The question is, are the robots actually the destruction of the mankind?.

Looking at the artifact, we can also think that these robots are not the bad guys but they are still working for the humans and protecting them from something. The reason why it is so scary for me is that one question in my mind " What is that something which scared us really bad that we had to create an indestructible device that can help us survive". There is a possibility that humans has left this place and hiding in a place but this time its definitely not from the robots. The truth is that the man has always reached the level of potential every time when it was a case of impossible.

The man has always reached for the stars.
