

Conversation essay

Sociology, Communication

Date Conversations We use interpersonal communication every day in our lives. There are three types of communication models, linear, interactive, and transactional communication. Each type of communication model has its strengths and weaknesses. Linear communication is simple and straightforward but it does not totally describe what you wanted to say because it is a one-way communication and short. Interactive communication can capture a variety of communication forms but is less active and not much of a collaborative one in both parties to interpret meanings because it neglects the active role of senders and receivers.

Transactional communication gives you time to collaborate and to capture what most people think, mostly face-to-face communication, and this model enables both parties to constantly exchange nonverbal and verbal messages. Interpersonal communication is an important tool to learn and to build up your communication skills because they are essential to an interpersonal relationship. It is difficult to build a relationship with someone if interpersonal communication skills are poor. Interpersonal communication helps us recognize concepts and awareness that influence our thoughts, emotions, and behaviors in a relationship.

I remembered my first date with Talia, our conversation was not as smooth or friendly. We were paired up by our instructor, not by our free will, and this created a barrier between us at first; especially that we are both old types of people that came from different cultures, ethnicities, and have different ethics. They say first impressions are very important when you approach someone because interpersonal communication is irreversible, so I was very cautious or self-aware when I interacted with Talia. Mostly we started out the conversation with a question, and then each of us takes turns to response to the question.

Half way through the conversation, I noticed that we used fewer questions to start out a new conversation, and we go to straight to the subjects. Our different ethnic's background intertwined our ethics which influenced our behaviors during the conversation, but we had good eyes contact and body gestures. Knowing my partner's background, and culture made the conversation more interesting and dynamic. We had our third conversation date was failed because we set the time up already but I was unable to pick up the phone at work.

During the time Talia gave me a call suddenly the customer came to eat and I was busy at that time. Normally, at the time we set up my uncle restaurant was not busy but I do not why this time so busy. I missed the conversation appointment with Talia. I know this is my false. After I received her message I tried to give her a call back but she did not pick up the phone either. And then I try text her message but the result I got from her was busy too. I know we all busy because we have many thing to take care.

But any way we were failed on third conversation, I know that each person has toresponsibilitywith the first thing we have to deal with. Interpersonal communication skill is essential to interpersonal relationship. It helps us understand and recognizes concepts to build a better relationship, whether it's for business, friendship, or romantic relationship. Understand interpersonal communication helps you prevent or dealing with dysfunctional relationship, and builds better social networks around you. I believed this skill also helps build your self-esteem, openness, maintaining relationship and a well-being life.