

Reflective analysis

Linguistics, English

Reflective Analysis Writing is a means by which a person reflects their thoughts about their surrounding and society at large. As a writer, it is important to attract your readers using different skills. Writing skills are not developed in a second or one day, but usually takes time. I can say that my writing has improved over time. The paper on green space has enough coverage about our environment; it clearly brings out the feelings and understanding of the other participants such as students and members of the faculty. I have used simple words that can be easily understood by readers of any age at any particular time. It is important for a writer to give their readers a clear picture of what is being talked about.

As I read through the paper, I could clearly visualize the green space around the campus. How some students were passionate about their green space and how others were just arrogant. The University's green space is slowly being encroached by housing projects to accommodate more students and staff members. This is clearly shown by the few green circles in the map illustrated in the paper (Drexel University). This means that apart from giving my thoughts in writing, I have also illustrated facts to support my claims. A good writer is one who is able to support their claims when it is necessary. It also gives the reader a sense of importance since the writer has taken time to give them an illustration to make them understand better.

Works Cited

Drexel University. Shared Places. Drexel university strategic plan. Philadelphia: Drexel University, 2014.