Re: Entry Level Enterprise Small Business Sales

In response to your organization's online posting of job offering for the position of an Entry Level in your Enterprise Small Business Sales division, I am hereby applying for the said position which is deemed based in Mountain View, California. Based on my educational background as a Business Management degree holder with a strong alliance and patronage for Google's applications, I believe I am qualified for this entry level role.

A review of the responsibilities including the need to address customer inquiries; working with marketing personnel; achieving sales targets; monitoring customer feedback; and recommending areas of improvement through creative and innovative thinking, perfectly fit one's personal and professional qualifications. The theoretical knowledge gained from the Business Management degree program, in conjunction with the innate skills in sales, communication, problem-solving, customer relations, as well as in teambuilding and group collaboration would significantly assist towards the attainment of tasks required of the position.

Past work experiences with a sales and marketing organization, the ABC Marketing Group, with a customer service representative role and that which entails the development of strategies deemed necessary to market the products and services to the target clientele proved to be challenging; yet rewarding. It is through this work experience that one gained skills in customer service, teambuilding, interpersonal communication, and even conflict resolution. These skills are believed to be of productive use to your organization through the position being offered.

I look forward to being of service to your prestigious organization. I am confident that, if chosen, the relationship would be mutually beneficial and rewarding for us both.
