Vidal argues that we as a nation should legalize drugs. He is correct.

Legalizing drugs can benefit the nation.

Legalizing drugs can help the nation financially. For example, it can benefit taxes. By making drugs legal, it opens up a professional business, which can then make drugs taxable. As stated by Drug War Statistics, tax revenue that drug legalization would yield annually, if currently-illegal drugs were taxed at rates compared to those on alcohol and tobacco would be $46.

7 billion ("Drug War Statistics." Drug Policy Alliance, Accessed 19 Jan. 2018).

In doing so, it allows more money to enter into the state. According to Business Insider, The state of California itself stands to earn a substantial chunk of cash from legalizing (Gilbert, Ben. "California Just Legalized, and It's Going to Have a Huge Impact on the Economy." Business Insider, 9 Nov.

2016). Legalizing can also help by saving money. The illegal marketing opens doors for many crimes, which results in spending money on entering criminals in prison.

As claimed by Drug War Statistics, the amount spent annually in the United States is fifty billion (+) ("Drug War Statistics." Drug Policy Alliance, Accessed 19 Jan. 2018). Keeping drugs illegal only places a legal burden on our society that we cannot continue to afford. On the other hand, some drugs are typically illegal for a reason they are harmful to take and can make the user act dangerously. Keeping them illegal helps protect our society and limit the amount of people from buying, which then the amount of accidents and deaths decreases. According to the International Overdose Awareness Day, in the United States, 43,982 people die every year from drug overdose, an average of about 120 deaths per day (International Overdose Awareness Day, Accessed 19 Jan. 2018).

The more we keep a restraint on drugs, the better our nation can be. Drugs are a burden to our society and the choices of people should not endanger the lives of everyone else. However, legalizing drugs has more service to the nation than keeping them illegal. Keeping drugs illegal only causes them to be produced by criminals with no sense of standards. By selling them through pharmacies, it would mean a solid control over who can buy them, whether they are of age or not and most importantly, whether they have a disorder, physically or mentally that prohibits them to take them.

By cutting out these people from the drug system, we can help create a safer environment. This also indicates that the state can know who receives the drugs. Vidal's claim about legalizing drugs is incorrect. It may benefit our nation in many ways, including protecting our society.
