Even though I have a Facebook, I do believe that it is a waste of time. It can be a great way to stay connected to friends, but the majority of what people do and the things they post don't really matter. There are a ton of games that have people sitting at the computer for hours, people are chatting with their friends, or "creeping" on others' pictures, posts, and friends. It keeps us from staying connected outside of the computer. There are way better things people could be doing or at the very least people could have real human contact. Facebook isn't the only thing keeping us attached to technology though, I can admit that. It is a main site that people stay on for long periods of time, essentially wasting time. -Betty White was right when she said Facebook is " a big waste of time." More often than not, Facebook serves as an inconvenient distraction to me. How I end up on Facebook for nearly an hour when I intended to finish typing my homework, is a question that I have yet to figure out. I have often considered deleting my Facebook, but there is always something that lures me back in. Although Facebook helps people keep in contact with friends and family, I think it leads other forms of communication to be less desirable and unnecessary. For example, your sister might come over with exciting news to share with you; however, you already read a status she posted that stated the exact same news. The excitement that coincides with her sharing the information with you personally is all but lost. Also, hearing your sister's news more than once was in a way, a waste of time. I realize that Facebook often wastes time in more than one way, but it can be beneficial as well, when used in moderation. As I age, I am assured that I will gradually become more aware of thhe important ways to spend my time rather than keeping up with Facebook. -Even though i have had facebook for a couple years, I feel that it is indeed a waste of time
