The era of modernism which existed between the years 1900 and 1925 drew mixed reactions from the traditionalists who condemned it and the modernists who embraced it. The world was changing and the evidence was everywhere; the exhibitions, theater, cinema, books, infrastructure, technology and buildings. The modernists took the opportunity to encourage the people to discard the old and embrace the new. According to the artists of modernism, new beginnings could only come about when the people initiated new methods of doing things. There was no stopping the new things happening around and the traditionalists had to fit in or shape out.
