Do you think meditation leads to heightened sensation and perception? Explain why or why not. I do believe that meditation can lead to heightened sensation and perception, when meditating you are focusing and your energy is building on that sensation, so if you are building on a certain sensation, then your perception would have to be heightened, also. For example if you are meditating on a certain food. The next time you eat that food your perception is going to be different from the first time you ate the food. It is a mind thing, and I can see where meditation can be very powerful. 2. Have you considered integrating meditation into your own lifestyle? If so, list one strategy for fitting meditation into your schedule. If not, explain why. After doing this paper and this exercise I would love to incorporate meditation into my lifestyle. My only problem is my time management is already at its worst. I am having a hard time keeping up with work, kids, and school. So finding the time to meditate is what is stopping me at this point and time.
