Media

Arguably, globalization has brought way many revolutions, this include the way we dress, the way we talk and even how we perceive gender roles (Muller, 2014). With a particular focus on gender roles, this paper will present a perspective on gender roles within the context of globalization, essentially it will establish how the perception of gender roles has since changed ensuing the revolutions brought about by globalization.

Globalization being the world integration consequent to exchange of ideas across the globe (Muller, 2014), incorporating ideas from other regions regarding gender roles have since changed my perception on the same, different from my earlier perceptions, I now embrace egalitarian moves or rather gender equality more overwhelmingly that before. Different from the past where I used to perceive women being entitled to different roles from men, globalizing has changed this perception, and I now view both sexes being equal particular when it comes to the roles that each of the group play. Following media exposure, and growing demand for equal treatments of all genders, more women, unlike the past are now engaging in matters that foster economic empowerment, different form the past where men had a profound impact on the economy, women have since joined the segment in large numbers (Marković, 2012). Another factor that has since changed regarding gender roles is the way home chores are undertaken, considering that more women are now engaging in industrious activities, men have since been forced to undertake some of the home chores a notion that was negative before.

Questions
