this short story takes place in a small town in North Carolina near the French Broad River. It never specifically said exactly what year it was, but based on suggestions one could make an educated guess that it was in modern times.

It also never said which time of the year it was. Ron Rash also gave hints that it was the fall since it was harvesting season for the marijuana plants.

The plot of “ Speckled Trout” starts out as Lanky driving his dad’s truck to Canny Creek to go fishing. Everything he was catching wasn’t good enough to sell so he went up river where nobody else fished. As he was going up river he came up on a “ no trespassing” sign, but he ignored it and kept going. He then stopped to fish, and finally caught some fish good enough to sell. He was now catching speckled trout.

While he was fishing he found marijuana plants planted in rows. Lanky thought he could take some plants to sell to make some extra money. He cut down five plants and drug them back to his car. Lanky went and showed the plants to his friend Travis. Travis is a pot head, so he knew who Lanky could sell the marijuana to. Travis took Lanky to a guy named Leonard.

Leonard bought the plants from Lanky. After Lanky went back to take more plants, he went back to Leonard. He bought that plants from Lanky again, but warned Lanky to not go back where he got the marijuana.

Most teenagers are always getting into trouble because they think nothing will ever happen to them.

Lanky always ignored any warning he got, which ended up hurting him. If he listen to his dad, Leonard, and even the sign, it would have saved him. The story of “ Speckled Trout” shows how such a simple story has great meaning with significant symbolism. If someone takes some time to listen to the warnings they get in life, it will save them, and also might save them some time to fix the problems they made. Ron Rash is saying to not be a Lanky, and to not be a speckled trout.
