If you decide to grow a beard you have to know that beard can offer a lot of your looks for sophistication, but it can also have drawbacks. If you don't know how to care beard, you may be tormented by an unpleasant beard itch. This short guide will help you understand why your beard is being touched and at the same time teach you how to get rid of itching.

WHAT DOES THIS SHOULD BE URGENT? Not all beards are created equally - some beards can irritate more than others. For many, beard itching can become unbearable, even forgoing a bearded look forever. But wait! Put the razor in place! There are many reasons why your beard can be itchy. Finding a problem can stop it. NEW GROWING BEARD Most beards are itching when starting to grow it, because too much shaving year your skin is used to be without a beard. If you never have to shave, every tip of the beard's hair is like a conical shape, which makes it soft and round.

When the beard grows, there is no friction with hair follicles and no irritation. However, when shaved, the razor blade cleaves the hair at a sharp angle, which can cause skin irritation when growing. This problem may be even worse if you choose to shave well, because the shaving angle is sharper and tighter. High quality razors, shaving brushes and shaving facilities for close shaving, raise skin from the skin, creating a cleaner shave. This would not be a problem if you are constantly shaved, but if you decide to grow a beard, the sharp edges of the hair under the skin irritate the hair follicles. They come in contact with the skin from the bottom and this causes skin irritation. And it does not happen with just one hair follicle, but with all sorts of it.

And it's very unpleasant. Itching usually takes place at the third growing week, so lock it! Your beard will be worth it. FULLY GROWED

BEARD Unfortunately, not only the new beard is itching. There are many reasons why full-grown beards are itchy, but the most common ones are dry skin or coarse hair (or both). Bearded hair, especially rough and hard hair, will constantly rub in your skin when you move.

It can cause itching and irritation even for well-moisturized skin, but if your skin is dry, it becomes a double problem. Dead skin cells are constantly eroding from your face (nasty, but it's true), but if you have a beard, they can get stuck in it. Dry skin further exacerbates the situation as more dead skin cells accumulate. It causes persistent skin pruritus. But don't worry. We have some tips to help you stop the beard's itch, make life easier and keep your stylish, masculine look alive. HOW TO STOP BEARD ITCHING WASH BEARD If you can prevent stinging dead skin cells on your face then it's less likely to have itchy beard.

Washing a beard every day (or every few days) is a great solution. However, beard hair is not the same as the hair on your head, I'm sure you've noticed. It is an androgenic hair, which means that it depends on the amount of testosterone in the body.

They grow differently than hair on their heads - they are often denser and more prickly. If you use shampoo or soap that is not created for this type of hair, it will remove the natural oils that are needed for the beards to stay healthy. Ordinary soap drains the skin under the hair, resulting in problems with dead skin cells and skin itching. Instead of a regular soap or shampoo, use a special soap created for beard. It is designed for both your beard and facial skin. CONDITIONING AND CARE OIL Conditioning is designed to irrigate the very beard. We've mentioned that itching can be caused by rough hair that is rubbing your skin. Beard conditioner softens beard hair.

It not only stops the beard's itch, but also creates a softer, more controlled beard appearance, which makes your beard look beautiful! All this can be achieved with special beard oils or beard balms. Oils and balsams are designed to moisturize both your beard and the skin behind it, which is also very important. Many bearded oils or balsams can ease the growth of the beard, helping your beards grow faster and denser. They also help shape a beard! BEARD COMBING Comb with brush. Beard combing is a detail that people often look at, but it has many benefits. Combing helps beards look soft, controlled, and also "learned" to grow their hair in the right direction. Beard combing also helps to remove dirt from your beard, which accumulates throughout the day. You should comb the beard before and after washing.

Combing before beard washing removes dirt and skin cells, and combing after beard washing
