Most Americans felt Teddy Roosevelt was the ideal president for America at the beginning of the 20th Century. Would he be as ideal today in 21st Century post-9-11 America? explain.

After eight years of President Bush, I don't think another hard-charging leader would be good for the United States. It might be possible to argue that many of the things Bush did post-9/11 were good to do, but they also need to be cleaned up by someone diplomatic. American needs to change between hard chargers and diplomats every few years otherwise the country's reputation will suffer.
