

Reading and writing

ASSIGN BUSTER

Reading and writing are complementary. Good reading encourages logical thinking which in turn will result in good writing and vice versa. The relationship between reading and writing is a strong one and people who are generally good at one will usually be good at the other. (" Reading and writing - the relationship", n. d). There must be certain level of maturity in thinking to understand the exact meaning of an author's writing. This could be gained only by good reading. Reading aims at distribute knowledge and information. A good reading increases a person's ability for rational thinking along with gaining knowledge. A good writing is a result of a good, logical thinking, which in turn will encourage good reading.

Intellectual abilities are essential in order to be an effective reader.

Intellectual abilities like Clarifying purposes, formulating clear questions and distinguishing accurate and relevant information help in effective reading.

Before beginning to read, a reader must clarify their purpose for reading a material or content. The content must be foretasted. During reading, a reader should check their understanding about the content and retreat in case if the understanding is poor. The pace at which the reader is reading content is also very important, according to the understanding and familiarity of their concept the speed should be adjusted. After completing the reading, a reader must be able to summarize the content to check if they have grasped the actual message of the author, all these will help the reader in understanding the matter exactly the way it was meant by the author.

Questions also help us in better understanding. The more the questions are, the better the understanding is. Formulating good questions before you start reading will give a good depth and different dimensions of the content.

Previewing content and framing questions before beginning the actual reading, increases the interest of the reader and helps in transferring the right message intended by the author. The reading should give a feeling of completeness, which is a good insight of what the author has mentioned in the text.

A good reader is a person who can differentiate between relevant information and accurate information. An accurate information is the exact information that they are looking for. Relevant information is significant and related information. A good reader will understand the essence of the content accurately and then also look at the other related message in the context. Writing can have multiple meanings but identifying the exact meaning for what it meant to be differentiates a good reader. Thinking beyond what is mentioned in the context is the capacity gained due to good reading.

Hence all these intellectual talents will contribute in accurately translating an author's intended message and must be practiced by beginners to increase their efficiency.

Reading and Writing - the Relationship, Language tutorial Retrieved on 16/07/2009 from <http://www.languagetutoring.co.uk/reading-and-writing-the-relationship.html>