Paragraph 1

If we banned Facebook, how do people talk with loved ones or friends who might be far away like overseas? Sure, we can talk on the phone with them, but Facebook is free, phones and phone calls aren't. " Staying in contact with friends through Facebook is actually easier than using regular emails because it doesn't matter that you sent a one line message or a cheesy free gift. Claire Ferris-Lay said this. People can also socialize more. Parents, teachers and other adults are always telling us to socialize as much as we can even scientists are saying this. If kids had Facebook, we can socialize more often, instead of just socializing at school. Facebook is a good way to do this.

Paragraph 2

of people, like (i had a name here), have Facebook, but don't even post statuses, some don't even have any friends on Facebook, they might just use it for games, so if that's so... how can everyone be stupid on Facebook? " but the important thing to realise here is that Facebook is only an arena for bullying, like the school lunch hall or the playground.

No one is trying to ban under-13s from those places. " Joanna Moorhead said this in her debate with Jenni Russell. Mike said; " Facebook is a tool. It can be used for good and for bad. Much like any other tool. For example, I could use a knife to slice up a cucumber for a salad. Or, I could use it as a weapon to hurt someone. Should knives be banned? Of course not. "
