Jeffrey Dahmer Case Study:

Jeffrey Dahmer is the American serial killer, who killed 17 men between 1978 and 1994 years. All the murders except of one were committed in Milwaukee, that is why the killer got a nickname Milwaukee Monster and Milwaukee Cannibal. Jeffrey was extremely violent and his crimes astonished the police and the people around, because the murderer raped his victim, killed her and consumed the parts of the bodies. In general Dahmer was accused of murdering, rape, necrophilia and cannibalism and such a set of crimes has made him one of the severest killers in the history of law and crime. It is obvious that such a person could not be kept on freedom and he was sentenced to 15 life imprisonment terms.

In 1994 Jeffrey Dahmer was killed by his fellow inmate who struck him into his head. Jeffrey Dahmer is the bright example of the serial killers and it is interesting to observe him from the psychological point of view, because it was obvious that such crimes can not be committed by an emotionally healthy person. Psychologists claimed that Dahmer suffered from necrophilia and did not understand how and why he killed so many people. In fact, it was proved that the killer planned every crime scrupulously and with the certain interval which made it easy to understand that he was not insane but healthy, so he was sentenced to 15 terms of life imprisonment. His crimes are supposed to be extremely violent and really fearful, as the killer found his victims in gay bars and then committed his outrageous actions.

Jeffrey Dahmer is a world famous serial killer and his name has become used in mass culture, for example, many directors borrowed the style and the manner of his crimes for the horror and detective films. Students who study crime and law and psychology will find it interesting to learn about the killer a lot in order to broaden their horizons and understand the behaviour and the source of the Dahmer's rage. One is supposed to research the biography of the serial killer, dwell on his childhood, then describe every crime and find the system there.
