

My community service

Sociology

Another contribution to my community involved helping to clean up the roads. By participating in the road cleanup, I was able to help maintain a safe environment that people in our community have been able to enjoy. Put simply, a clean environment is one that is easier to enjoy.

As an active member of my church community, I help in maintaining physical beauty as well as trying to nurture the religious aspects of the congregation. When I helped to restore my church, I was not only doing so out of the goodwill of my heart, but I also had in mind the many people who will be able to experience the same joy that I do when I attend my church. Not only did I help in renovating the building, but I was also able to teach young children about the church's founding as well as the biblical history of my religion. By participating in such service contributions, I was not only able to retain the faith in my religion for many people, but also bring new people into my faith.

Community Service is not only a benefit to your community, but it also gives a person self-respect. These traits cannot be taken or given by others, but achieved through struggles that he or she experiences. The satisfaction that a person achieves by helping out their community is rewarding in that he or she will understand the gratefulness of those he or she has helped. By helping those out of goodwill and for the chance for others to live in a better environment, a person is able to achieve true happiness. An individual and their community can mutually aid one another, and this is what I have tried to do over the last years.
