Discussion Today, one of the major problems in our society is homelessness. Usually it is a result of unemployment or it belongs to a group of working poor. In most cases, problem of such origin is a result of economic instability. Employers have no need in unexperienced workers. In other cases, the salary is too low and for extended families where only one person works, for example, it will be difficult to make ends meet. As a result, all this makes people to live in the street. Fortunately, it is not too late to solve these problems in our society and our government gives us this opportunity. We have a chance to build a federally-funded homeless shelter in the suburban area. This shelter would provide privacy and dignity to homeless. Moreover, most of those people are women and children. We should keep in mind that discrimination is forbidden. " Discrimination consists of one-on-one acts by members of the dominant group that harm subordinate group members or their property. Often, this kind of discrimination is based on the belief that certain groups are innately inferior or superior to others". " Yet the daily assumptions that we make about members of groups different from our own guide our attitudes and behaviors toward practices that often result in sometimes very subtle discrimination" (Reutter). In my opinion we have to try to help other people and co-operate with one another, give money for charity, pay attention to others problems, all in all, not to be indifferent. This is what living in society mean.

These groups have different aims and values. The Millennials are the generation Y group with the core values that include optimism, confidence, a sense of civic duty, open-minded and so forth. They support the idea of connection to others and the world by using communication technology. Those people are goal oriented and have all the necessary skills to do a great job. Millennials are able to combine the skills and knowledge which Baby Boomers and Generation X groups have. It is a so called balanced group which grows up only professionals in all fields. So, Millennials reflect all that, what a successful organization should have.
