EXPERIENCE FROM PART-TIME JOB Every young person eventually needs to consider a career path, and working part-time jobs are a common way to gain experience in determining which career field is right for the individual. Part-time jobs are a good way to gain experience not only in a particular position, but are also instrumental in teaching a newcomer to the working world a number of important skills that are necessary to succeed in the long-term. From the real situation – one day to be a serving staff at a coffee shop, I myself find that part-time work activities give me many useful lessons.

Working environment is the way to have many interactions between us and customers, partners, also the managers. The important thing I want to mention is “to be welcoming, friendly and polite”. Sometimes, the complaint of customers, the criticism of the manager make us so confused. However, learning how to suffer from such things like that is also a lesson when you are engaged in a part-time job. So, “work quickly and stay calm under pressure”. Besides, being in working environment compels me to improve communication skills. At the first time, I felt so shy because of my insufficient communicability.

But, thank to character of the job, I try to overcome myself and make it better as much as possible. I think it works some way. Finally, what I learned from a part-time job is ability to multi-task. Having organization skills is very important even in the most unorganized, chaotic atmosphere. Although the part-time job I chose is not relevant to my major, I still think it's useful, at least in the current time. Part-time jobs are a good way to learn experience not only about working, but offer a number of soft skills that I am sure it will be very necessary for my job in the future.
