Body
No formal statistics for the animal protection movement.

Three major programs in U. S.
1)PETA
2)ASPCA
3)Humane Society

5, 000 independent animal shelters.

Transition: Now that we have talked about the shelters, I'm going to tell you about the animals.

Breeds of dogs
A. AKC only non-profit registry of purebreed dog's in the U. S. A.
B. Animalshelter. org lists the top 10 breeds of 2010 (slide)
C. Mix-breeds or mutts are a combiation of two or more of breeds of dog

Transition: Whether you care about pedigree or not, a shelter has what you are looking for.

Dogs from shelters are a sure thing.
A. Happyhealthydogs. com states that adopted pets from a shelter have been seen by a vet and usually given a clean bill of health.
B. Most shelter dogs have background paperwork, some include pedigree that the AKC declined registration on.
C. The National Council on Pet Population Study & Policy (NCPPSP) 25\% of dogs that enter the shelter are purebred.

Transition: Now that you know that all types of dogs are available at shelters, I want to tell you about the other benefits of shelter dogs.

Cost/Benefit analysis.
A. If you purchase a pedigreed AKC Labrador Retriever from pet store or breeder, you can expect to pay upward of $$ 300$ for your puppy. Add the cost of neutering and vaccinations. You are well over $$ 500$ in initial costs. In fact, you may be closer to $$ 1000$. Yet Dogsonly. org lists most adoption fees between $$ 75.00$ and $$ 150$. 00 including spay/neuter and rabies vaccination.
B. It has become common practice to test their temperament before placing the dog up for adoption.
C. 5/10 dogs and 7/10 cats in shelters are euthanized annually because no one adopts them.

D. Most shelters will allow you to bring a dog back if you don't work well together, and you can try again.

Conclusion

Shelters have many breeds of dogs. Some breeds are even pedigree. Getting a dog from a shelter allows you to know what you are getting, and if it isn't a good fit. You can bring him back and try again.

With all the dogs in the country in need of good homes, and with the cost of a new puppy. Choosing a shelter dog over one from a breeder may be the right choice for you.
