The full quotation mark is “ For the manus that rocks the cradle. is the manus that regulations the universe. ” It is from a verse form by William Ross Wallace that celebrates Motherhood and the construct that what a individual becomes in their life starts with what they learn from their female parent and that finally. it is female parents that have the greatest influence on what we are or become.

It is hence to a great grade true that work forces and adult females owe more to the influence, preparation and illustration of their female parent in early childhood, than to any other one influence. What they do in the universe as work forces and adult females is mostly determined by what she did for them when they were small.

Therefore she indirectly through them governs the fate of the race ; it is her manus that rocks the cradle, and it is her manus that indirectly regulations the universe.

This is true whether the influence of the female parent is good or bad. There are foolish and bad, every bit good as good and wise, female parents. The hereafter of any state, the hereafter of the race, hence, depends on the character and preparation of the female parents of the lifting coevals.

It is hence a affair of supreme importance that the female parents should be educated and fitted for their of import undertaking. This is one of the strongest statements for the proper instruction of adult females. No race can be truly strong and progressive whose adult females are nescient and untrained
