Nobody can be authentic by trying to imitate someone else. People look at you when you are authentic, not a copy of someone else. Authentic leaders demonstrate a real passion for their purpose, develop their values consistently, and conduct with their hearts as well as their heads establish long term, meaningful relationships and have the self-discipline to get results.

We can ask use how to become an authentic leader? Over the past 5 years, leadership issues have emerged. We realized that we need to find the leader of the 21st century. The author has conducted a long study on the development of leadership in business. They interviewed a hundred business leaders from different backgrounds to understand how today's leaders are becoming and will remain true leaders. The research has concluded that it is not necessary to be born with particular characteristics or traits to steer.

To date, anyone can be a genuine leader. Authentic leaders stand out because they learn from their experiences and not by being passive observers in meetings for example or in conflicts with employees. These people take the time to examine their experiences and think about them. This person grows with time and develops a better self-awareness. But authentic leaders ask and listen to honest feedback.

In addition, a business leader, for example, can be perceived as a leader, and can generate short-term results without being authentic, but authentic leadership is the only way to generate long-term results. About balancing your extrinsic and intrinsic motivations, with a very high level of motivation and a vital balance of life, authentic leaders better understand what motivates them in their lives. There are therefore two types of extrinsic and intrinsic motivations. Many leaders must reach higher and higher goals because of the outside world of the 21st century.

In addition, intrinsic motivations are derived from their sense of life related to a person's life story and how we frame our lives. Intrinsic motivations are more consistent with human values and are more satisfying than extrinsic motivations. About building your support team, business leaders can never succeed alone. They need collaborators not to lose their way and their objectives. Authentic leaders always receive feedback from their teams with advice, answers.

The leaders build their networks, their experiences and have a more creative openness. Today, many business leaders have had a mentor in their past lives. To respond about the question, to become an authentic chief, this person must have lived life stories in a way that is established through his past. Authentic leaders act in the good sense of the word so that they are guided by their internal efforts to reward. Many leaders spoke of their proven motivation for a difficult experience.

Authentic leaders experience these formative experiences to make sense of their lives. This allows them to overcome their challenges.
