In the 2005 essay "you've got to find what you love" Steve Jobs CEO of Apple Computer and Pixar Animation Studios gives a speech to the graduating class at Stanford university encouraging them to be risky, strive for what you want in life and just trust in their "Gut Instinct" even if it means to be different. In the first story Jobs urges the students to trust in themselves and take chances in things that might not seem to be.

Jobs himself took a chance when he "dropped out of college" and believed things will work out eventually, even at that moment his sleeping and eating condition were not the best. Jobs takes another chance when he decides to take a calligraphy class. He found the class interesting. Although he did not know where it would lead him, later on this interest led him to designing the first Macintosh computer which was designed into Mac, one of his biggest successes. In the second story Jobs tells the students to find what they love in life and follow that.

Jobs also goes on to say that it is okay to have some ups and downs and a bumpy road on their way to success. Jobs found what he loved to do at an early age, which was to have his own company. He started his company in his mom's garage which later turned into a "billion dollar business, called Apple. 10 years after Jobs started his company he gets fired. Also, when Jobs got fired he did not give up; he accepted life for how it was. Rather Jobs went on to creating bigger and better things. In which he later founded NeXT and Pixel company.

In creating "the first computer animated feature film Toy Story". In the third story Jobs gives example to the students about how to live their lives to the fullest on earth because any day it can change and they can no longer here. for example jobs said “ that every morning when he wakes up he looks at himself in the mirror and asks himself if today was the last day of his life, would he do what he is about to do today and whatever his answer is, that’s how he goes about living life .

From this jobs is telling the students to choose wisely how each day of their life is spend and don’t let it go to waste because they only on here temporarily and then they all gone. Another example is that the one piece of advice that jobs concluded and left the Stanford graduates with is to stay hungry, stay foolish. Jobs is implying that the students should stay motivated , determined ambitious , goal oriented and hopeful but at the same time have fun being creative , think outside the box and don’t be afraid to try something new or different.
