Frederick Douglass was a former slave that escaped and became a leader of the Abolitionist movement. His childhood was more harsh and he later had five children. He created newspapers for his cause. When his wife died in 1882, he then met an activist named Ida B.

Wells. In 1884, he ended up marrying someone entirely different named Helen Pits. She was a feminist. His wife was white and a lot younger than Douglass. That created problems for them.

Her family stopped talking to her because of it. A feminist friend stood up for them though. Douglass and his new wife traveled to England, France, Italy, Egypt and Greece from 1886 to 1887.

Douglass kept on speaking for his cause for a few years after he was remarried.
