Topic 2 – ST & A ; protected countries About 10-15 per centum of the earth's surface is in designated protected countries. with the primary focal point on biodiversity preservation. However, despite protection. " [T] he loss of biodiversity is still speed uping within and beyond the boundaries of protected areas" (Bushell & A ; Eagles 2007. p. 1) . Nelson Mandela. in his gap address at the fifth World Parks Congress in Durban argued that " It is merely through confederations and partnerships that Protected Areas can be made relevant to the demands of society. " In this context, critically review tourism's part to biodiversity preservation and research chances for confederations between protected countries and touristry to further relevancy of protected countries to local communities and the broader society. Use illustrations from around the universe to exemplify your statement.

Topic 4 – ST & A ; excavationWith the rapid enlargement of natural resource extraction industries such as excavation and oil and gas operations in Australia. they are progressively infringing on countries used for nature-based tourism. For illustration. the enlargement of Gladstone Port in Queensland is endangering the unity of the Great Barrier Reef ; and excavation and gas undertakings along the Kimberley Coast in Western Australia are likely to negatively impact the current tourism experience in this country. Similarly. the continuance of old-growth logging in Tasmania may cut down chances for nonextractive economic chances such as ecotourism. In a political and economic environment where authorities presently see themselves as extremely dependent on the short term gross from natural resource extraction industries. the demands of the tourism industry may be seen as secondary. Research avenues for tourism to beef up its voice and image as a more sustainable alternate and to guarantee that the strategic demands of the tourism industry are recognised and being considered in the political sphere.
