The analysis is based on three quotes from each book, including The Terror by David Anderson, France in the Enlightenment by Daniel Roche, The French Revolution by Linda Frey, The Rights of Man, The Reign of Terror by Susan Banfield, and The History of France by W. Scott Haine (6 The French of Revolution and Napoleon) Analysis

3 Quotes from the Terror by David Anderson

"it is the French Revolution that invented the technique subsequently adopted by all usurping regimes from 1717 St Petersburg to 1790s Santiago; mob terror for seizing power, bureaucratic terror for consolidating it" (14).

"Most of Paris seems to have spent the 1790s engaged in haranguing competitions of rhetoric, punctuated by outbreaks of crowd violence" (55).

"The French Revolution demonstrated that bloodthirsty savagery was not just a product of benighted times" (81).

In its book, the author explains the confrontation between the civilians and the French authorities (Anderson 27). This made the republican movement that was opposing the government to grab the power, though the assistance of British soldiers. Notably, there was a consistent outbreak of violence across the nation culminating to the turmoil. In his, work, the author explains that there were some techniques, which the regime adopted in countering the invasion (Anderson 51). For example, they used the mob and bureaucratic terror.
