Abstract

Today we live in a world when everything is happening and changing at a rapid phase. Our wants have become so complicated that most of us feel, doing one job is not sufficient. In this situation, women should have to work with men by shoulder to shoulder. But the humanity has evolved in a male-centered, patriarchal society; men were always the main suppliers of food and money, and women were always the ones who had a duty to look after the fire and children. That means that females were dependent on men financially and lost their financial support as a consequence separation, divorce, death or their partner's loss of employment. They state that work is harmful for female's health, family life, and that women are in general worse workers. Or there are two different points of view about women working.

No one denies that the woman is a vital part in the society, and sometimes the whole society; she is the mother, the sister, the daughter, the wife and the woman who waggles the cradle with her right hand and the world with her left hand. Women used to be partners of men since the beginning of the world; not only that she used to do the house works but also sewing and taking care of the farm work and the farm animals in addition to many other things necessary for the family. But after the development of economics consumerism became the trend of the society, especially in cities where farming and keeping farm animal is something almost impossible, and with the opening of schools, hospitals, factories, companies and the public sector institutions with the notable decrease of the family income, many women started their professional life outside her house to support her spouse and her family. These days, many women feel that having a job makes them feel better and more powerful.
