Early Marriage Case Study:

Early marriage is the marriage which is characterized with the involvement of children (under 18) into this process.

The most common form of early marriage is between a mature man and a girl, who is under 18. The problem of child marriage has always existed in the human society but years ago it at least had its own purpose and explanation. Till the 19th century early marriages were quite popular all over the world because of the length of the human life. People lived less than nowadays and had to start the grownup life earlier, as a result the majority of girls got married at the age of 16. One of the most widespread reasons of child marriage was poverty. The family was not able to support all its children and the best decision was the marriage.

Other parts of the world practised and still practise child marriages because it is a part of the tradition. Early marriage is supposed to be a negative practice, because the child's psychological and physical health can be damaged. The child does not understand the purpose of the marriage and very often this process is involuntary. The child can suffer from stress, depression; as a result have problems with heart and other systems and organs. Numerous international organizations are against early marriages, because it leads to the child pregnancy and other problems.

Child marriage is the break of the human rights, because the young person is often forced to marry someone against her own will and such practice is not tolerated in the international community. Early marriage is a serious problem for the young person, because she loses her chance to live a normal life,
