current problems may end... the stability of the US-China relationship. Although there are some tensions, these are stressors that will lead to an open conflict within 25 years. An open conflict between China and the US seems harder possible. As a matter of fact, I tend to have an optimistic point of view and believe that peaceful relations between the two countries are more important than ever. First of all, the economic changes we witness will be dramatic but the single market form in China in 1970. At the moment, 1 billion dollars in 2004 [2]. Another effect of the international division of labor is that the US no longer produces as a part of the goods that are imported, and China's demand for US products will be reduced. As a result, the US will be able to reduce its dependence on China for raw materials and energy. This will lead to a more balanced relationship between the two countries. It is probable that the US will continue to play a leading role in the world economy, and China will continue to grow rapidly. Therefore, the US will not have to worry about a conflict with China.
